

July 2006—Indiana National and State Register Listings

ALLEN COUNTY

Martin Blume, Jr. Farm

7311 Flutter Rd.
Fort Wayne

This c.1883 Italianate farmhouse has a rather substantial addition which alters its characteristics, however, considered as part of the impressive collection of well-maintained agricultural buildings, it maintains its contributing status. The large bank barn is among the finest of its type in the township.

FAYETTE COUNTY

Fayette County Courthouse

401 Central Avenue
Connersville

Recently, the courthouse was rehabilitated, a massive project including a large addition and restoration efforts on both the exterior and interior of the 1849/1890 courthouse. The courthouse has significance under Criterion A as the century-old home of Fayette County government. Also, the building retains many of its historic architectural features, and is clearly the most important example of Romanesque Revival in the county.

HENDRICKS COUNTY

Dr. Jeremiah and Ann Jane DePew House

292 East Broadway
Danville

This house is significant as an example of Greek Revival / I-House architecture.

HOWARD COUNTY

Kokomo County Club Golf Course

1801 Country Club Dr.
Kokomo

The nomination makes a good case for the integrity of the golf course, its significant characteristics, and its place in the work of master designer, William Diddle. The application also underscores the importance and popularity of golf as part of the outdoor recreation movement of the early 20th century.

HUNTINGTON COUNTY

Drover Town Historic District

Roughly bounded by the Little R, S. LaFontaine St., Olinger and Elm Sts., Ogan and Salamonie Ave. and Whitelock St.
Huntington

Drover Town, an early, separate settlement in the Huntington area, reflects the importance of early transportation routes in its plat. Another unique streetscape feature are the many glazed brick sidewalks that survive in the area. The district includes the high-style brick Italianate home of Drover Town founder Henry Drover, as well as early vernacular houses that document the founding of the community. Continued economic growth in Huntington assured that the district would have important examples of Queen Anne architecture from the 1890s, and Craftsman housing types from the 1905 –1930 time period.

JENNINGS COUNTY

Walnut Street Historic District

Roughly including both sides of Walnut St. between State and Gum Sts.
North Vernon

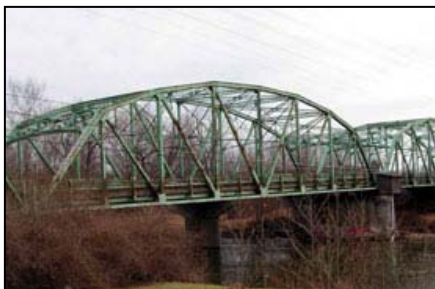

The district includes a core of architecturally significant Queen Anne houses, mostly built for management of the North Vernon Lumber Company. The district is significant for its architecture as well as community planning/development.

KNOX COUNTY

County Bridge #45

Carries Cty Rd. 229 over the White River
Wheatland

The nomination for this 1903 Pratt through truss bridge makes a case for the design/engineering importance of the bridge on a statewide level, as well as its role in transportation in Knox County.

MARION COUNTY

Marion County Bridge 0501F

86th and 82nd St. over White River
Indianapolis

This nomination highlights the historic transportation significance of this bridge, as well as its design merits relative to the development of Indiana's public highway system. It is one of the most visible and tangible resources of the Route 100 effort.

MIAMI COUNTY

Elkenberry Bridge

IN 100 E over Eel R in Richland Twp.
Chili vicinity

This 1920 steel truss bridge is significant for its role in transportation and as a good example of bridge engineering of its day. The bridge is the only surviving span built by the Rochester Bridge Company in Miami County, and one of few by the company left in the state. The bridge represents a transitional period in truss fabrication, in terms of its connection points. The bridge is also well-preserved. Since metal truss bridges like this (especially larger ones) are increasingly rare throughout the state, it has statewide level of significance.

MONROE COUNTY

Ellettsville Downtown Historic District

Roughly bounded by Main, Sale, Walnut and Association Sts.
Ellettsville

The district is significant for its association with the development of the stone quarrying and milling industry in Monroe County. Several of the district's buildings reflect this heritage directly, with limestone elements from area quarries, or past occupants who worked for the mills. Others generally reflect the town's economic prosperity based on the stone industry. The nomination also explains the architectural significance of the district, which includes a wide array of significant vernacular housing types and architectural styles.

ST. JOSEPH COUNTY

Northside Boulevard Riverwall

600-1100 Northside Blvd.
South Bend

The riverwall borders a large park in downtown South Bend. Its simple glacial boulder construction and passive recreation use (enjoyment of the river's view) reflect New Deal era interest in locally found materials and simple, free public recreation sites.

Walker Field Shelterhouse

1305 Ewing Ave.
South Bend

The shelterhouse served a significant local park, and as noted in the nomination, its architecture reflects the tenants of rustic park design advocated in the United States at the time.
